INTRODUCTION

Recurrent worldwide infections—seasonal influenza, SARS, MERS, and now COVID-19—cause massive mortality and economic damage. These epidemics have specific causes that have remained neglected. Poultry flocks are breeding grounds for influenza A viruses, and live animal markets are the source of coronavirus. Because these pathogens and others like them will continue to cause massive health challenges unless urgent action is taken, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) now calls for a ban on live animal markets.¹ Therefore, we petition the Surgeon General to “prevent the introduction, transmission, or spread of communicable diseases”² by prohibiting the operation of live animal markets in the United States and working with international bodies to harmonize this policy worldwide.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Influenza A is an avian virus. Beginning with the 1918 H1N1 “Spanish influenza” (if not before), all influenza A outbreaks have come originally from bird viruses that have found their way into domesticated animal populations and, from there, into farmworkers, their contacts, and the broader community. The H1N1 virus killed millions of people. It later combined with an H2N2 avian virus to create a new H2N2 virus capable of infecting humans, leading to the 1957 “Asian influenza.” In 1968, an H3 avian virus combined with the H2N2 human virus to create yet another virus, causing the “Hong Kong influenza.” Of the eight genetic segments found in the 1957 and 1968 viruses, five persisted from the original 1918 virus, while three came from the new avian viruses.³ In each case, poultry flocks have served as reservoirs breeding new influenza viruses. Pig farms have also contributed.

Coronavirus outbreaks come from animals sold in live markets. A live animal market is a retail food market where, in the regular course of business, animals are housed alive in close proximity and then sold, often to be immediately slaughtered on site, to consumers for the purpose of human consumption or use other than as companion animals.⁴ The Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) epidemic of 2002–2003 originated in horseshoe bats in China’s Yunnan province, passing through civets sold for meat to humans. Middle East respiratory syndrome (MERS-CoV) is caused by a coronavirus from bats.

COVID-19 appears to have originated in bats and passed to humans via live animal markets. In lay terms, “the virus jumped first to the people working with these animals in the market, and then began another process of evolution, which allowed it to spread from human to human, adapting to its new host species and becoming more effective at that adaptation all the time.”⁵

Live animal markets persist in many countries due to cultural beliefs, lack of refrigeration, and other factors. In the United States, birds (e.g., spent laying hens, ducks, guinea fowl, turkeys, geese, and pigeons), pigs, cows, sheep, goats, and rabbits are the animals most often commonly sold at live animal markets.⁶ Some also sell wildlife, such as frogs and turtles.⁷

In 2004, a U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) official estimated that “more than 20 million birds of various species pass through as many as 150 known storefront slaughter facilities in the Northeast metropolitan areas each year.”⁸ By 2009, there were “about 90 live-poultry markets in the [New York] metropolitan area” alone.⁹ The New York Senate described the markets this way:

Businesses and residents complained regularly about the unbearable odor that emanated from the markets, odor that became virtually intolerable during the hot summer months. Often, markets failed to properly dispose of animal entrails, which created undesirable conditions in the streets and on the sidewalks of the city. Floating feathers clogged sewer drains and air conditioning/heating ducts and presented asthma, allergy and respiratory hazards.

Experience in local communities has shown that these markets are not monitored appropriately due to the inadequate number of state and city inspectors necessary to ensure market compliance with health, food safety and environmental laws. Lack of monitoring became especially frightening in light of Mad Cow disease and recent outbreaks of avian influenza (“bird flu”).

The continued siting of live poultry markets in the midst of dense, urban and often residential areas has been found to jeopardize both residential and commercial property values as families were forced to move away from their homes and businesses were forced to close or relocate due to employee illness and a loss of customers.¹⁰

These are precisely the conditions that set the stage for further mutations of potentially deadly viruses including influenza A and coronaviruses.

In 2013, a Muscovy duck—a large bird native to Central and South America—tested positive for an avian influenza virus at a Brooklyn live bird market,¹¹ resulting in a ban of exports to Taiwan and Japan of poultry products originating in the state of New York.¹² Since 2010, there have been more than 450 reported U.S. cases of variant influenza A (i.e., “swine flu”), with most appearing to arise out of exposure to pigs.¹³ Live animals markets are known for additional problems: a 2017 lawsuit against J&B Poultry Market in Philadelphia documented the live animal market’s practice of storing recently slaughtered chickens on a shelf at temperatures ranging from 66 to 80 degrees.¹⁴

The animals in these markets travel in interstate commerce before and after sale. For example, the northeastern U.S. live bird market system “is comprised of more than 120 markets in 6 states (New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts) with the majority of the markets being located in New York and New Jersey. . . . Most of the birds come from adjacent states but some birds are transported several hundred miles from states as far west as Ohio.”¹⁵ The markets are popular in large cities,¹⁶ such as New York City and Philadelphia, from where the purchased animals routinely cross state lines again before they are consumed.

As of 2020, conditions have worsened considerably. COVID-19 is now present in communities with live animal markets. It is a certainty that some of their workers and customers will have been exposed to this virus. This means that the existing virus (COVID-19) can easily come in contact with new coronaviruses carried by live animals, creating new, deadly strains.

Just as influenza A viruses that previously caused human disease have combined with novel viruses to create new threats, the same is now likely to occur with coronaviruses, creating variants to which humans have no immunity and no vaccine, as is the case with the current COVID-19 pandemic.

Live animal markets are a welcome mat to coronaviruses. The failure to close a single live animal market in China led to a pandemic that closed countless businesses worldwide and led to an enormous death toll and economic havoc.

Yet despite these conditions and the dangers they pose, the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Poultry Products Inspection Act—federal laws that regulate the slaughter, processing, and labeling of meat and poultry products respectively—exempt many live animal markets from inspection requirements.¹⁷ State laws are inconsistent.¹⁸ It is therefore the Surgeon General's duty to intervene on behalf of the public at large.

LEGAL AUTHORITY

By statute, “[t]he Surgeon General, with the approval of the Administrator [Secretary], is authorized to make and enforce such regulations as in his judgment are necessary to prevent the introduction, transmission, or spread of communicable diseases from foreign countries into the States or possessions, or from one State or possession into any other State or possession.”¹⁹

This statutory provision authorized²⁰ regulations allowing the Surgeon General to restrict interstate transportation of psittacine birds during outbreaks of psittacosis,²¹ an infectious disease in humans arising out of contact with such birds. The provision also authorized a federal ban on the interstate and intrastate sale and distribution of small turtles to reduce the occurrence of salmonella outbreaks.²² The ban was based in part on the finding that “studies of salmonellosis have resulted in estimates that 14 percent of all human cases of salmonellosis are turtle-associated.”²³

In response to arguments that such a ban would infringe constitutional property rights, the federal notice announcing the ban stated that an “individual’s right to possess that pet must be weighed against the public hazard which may be created by allowing the sale of pets which may be contaminated with organisms dangers to human health.”²⁴ The ban, still in effect, applies to both interstate (typically regulated by the federal government) and intrastate (typically regulated by state governments) commerce because the interstate spread of disease through Salmonella- and Arizona-contaminated turtles cannot be fully controlled without extending the ban to intrastate sales. All turtles present the same illness potential from Salmonella and Arizona organisms. Contaminated turtles may be purchased in one State for use as a pet in another. In addition, the existence of lawful business operations selling turtles within a State creates the possibility of unlawful interstate sales that are difficult or impossible to detect and stop. Therefore, The Commissioner finds that a prohibition on the sale of all turtles, regardless of origin or destination, is in his judgment necessary to prevent the spread of communicable disease from one State to another.²⁵

The resulting regulation, “Turtles intrastate and interstate requirements,” reads in part, “Sales; general prohibition. Except as otherwise provided in this section, viable turtle eggs and live turtles with a carapace length of less than 4 inches shall not be sold, held for sale, or offered for any other type of commercial or public distribution.”²⁶ The same principles should apply here.

ACTION REQUESTED

Live animal markets are a breeding ground for organisms that may not cause disease in animal hosts but can be deadly to humans. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, “more than 6 out of every 10 known infectious diseases in people can be spread from animals, and 3 out of every 4 new or emerging infectious diseases in people come from animals.”²⁷ Outbreaks cause death and significant economic harm.

Post-outbreak immunity is of little use when, as happened with H1N1, a rampant virus combines with another existing virus to create a new one capable of infecting humans. Nor can immunity stop an outbreak recurrence, like the one that NIAID predicts for COVID-19,²⁸ from harming those who are not yet immune.

Just last week NIAID’s director said the following about live animal markets:

I have no authority to call for anything, but . . . I think they should shut down those things right away. I mean it just — it boggles my mind how when we have so many diseases that emanate out of that unusual human animal interface, that we don’t just shut it down. I don’t know what else has to happen to get us to appreciate that. And I think there are certain countries in which this is very commonplace. I would like to see the rest of the world really lean with a lot of pressure on those countries that have that, because what we’re going through right now is a direct result of that.²⁹

Whatever authority NIAID may lack the Surgeon General has been granted by statute. There must not be another pandemic. To “prevent the introduction, transmission, and spread of communicable diseases”³⁰ in the United States, the Surgeon General must promulgate regulations that prohibit the sale, transfer, donation, other commercial or public offering, or transportation, in interstate or intrastate commerce, of live birds, mammals, reptiles, and amphibians to retail facilities that hold live animals intended for human consumption. There is no justification for allowing one type of business, live animal markets, to cause the global shutdown of all other businesses and the deaths of tens of thousands of people.

³⁰ 42 U.S.C. § 264(a).

In keeping with NIAID's recommendations, the Surgeon General must also ensure that the Department of Health and Human Services, as head of the U.S. delegation to the World Health Assembly³¹ scheduled for May 17 through 21, collaborates with the delegations of the other 193 World Health Organization member states to harmonize this policy at the international level.
